Collection Information

Abstract : The Unitarian Congregational Society of Lincoln separated from the Orthodox church in Lincoln in 1841, and established a second parish, with church building at the center of Lincoln. Discussions relating to a rejoining of the Unitarian and Congregational churches began in the 1920s, and the two churches formally merged in 1942 as First Parish in Lincoln.

Historical/Biographical Notes

The First Parish in Lincoln was established 1747 in the Second Precinct of Concord, Lexington, and Weston, some seven years prior to Lincoln's incorporation as a Town. The church followed the Orthodox traditions established by Massachusetts law. During the tumultuous times in Massachusetts church history during the late 18th and early 19 centuries, the First Parish split into two factions - those favoring the traditional Orthodox interpretation (later Congregationalists) and those favoring a more liberal aspect of theology (later Unitarians.) The Unitarian party separated from First Parish in 1841, some eight years after disestablishment of the Orthodox church. Discussions to consider the merger of the two Lincoln churches began in the 1920s after the century old theological differences had become blurred, and were expedited during the tenure of the Rev. Charles Styron, who was called in 1936 as minister to both the Congregational and the Unitarian church. In 1942 the two churches were formally federated as the First Parish in Lincoln.

Scope and Content

The collection comprises church registers and ledgers of church organizations, treasurer's accounts, minutes, etc. Also included are clippings, correspondence, sermons, order of service, records relating to 1937 repair of the church, and other documents. Also included is a ledger containing minutes of the Joint Committee of the First Church in Lincoln, Congregational, and the Unitarian Congregational Society in Lincoln, 1935-1942.

The collection is arranged topically and by format.
